Gerard, says the Cleveland Flain Dealer.

Mrs. Winslow came each day after her arrival, always in a modish costume. One day she was all in white, a white pleated crepe gown, white scarf and chiffon hat, with a touch of color in the green ribbon trimming, which matched her large jade eardrops. Another day she was in a rose-colored chiffon hat and gown with an all-enveloping gray satin cape for a wrap. Again she was in blue and white, a white Irish linen gown embroidered in blue, with blue hat trimmed in white. Capes and cape-coats of duvetyne, serge or satin were worn a great deal. Mrs. Julius Janes wore a black-and-white checked woolen cape over her white checked woolen cape over he suit. One day it was worn with a black-and-white woolen suit, another day over blue serge, and still another day over a tan-and-white sports suit.

Her famous pearls were worn by Mrs. Jean St. Cyr. a visitor at San Francisco, at a charm-Mrs. St. Cyr's ing dinner given recently at one of the downtown hotels by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith. The necklace is composed of pearls, exactly matched, each of the number the size of a marble. It extends several inches below the throat and is one of the handsomest pearl strands ever seen at San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. St. Cyr have been there for some weeks and are guests at the St. Francis Hotel, where they have entertained on many occasions. Their tertained on many occasions. Their coming is always the signal for much pleasurable gayety, their friends delighting in giving affairs in their honor. At the present time, however, they are accepting only informal social courtesies, their visit being more for rest and relaxation than for the social functions. Mrs. St. Cyr brought her famous collection of jewels with her, of the number her pearls perhaps the loveliest.

of the feminine contingent of society.

And evidence would indicate that they will be fully as daring as, if not a little more so than, the man aviators. Just so soon as the first flight has been made, the average woman becomes henceforth an aviation enthusiast.

At the recent Red Cross benefit at the Peninsula Hotel, San Francisco, a number of women made their initial attempt at the sport. Recently Mrs. Charles Wellington Cobb made a flight from San Carlos with Paul Edwards. Mrs. Cobb has visited numerous schools of aviation in various parts of the country, and is now deeply interested in the sport. On the occasion of her recent flight she ascended over $800 feet, without even the preliminary "strapping in" which most beginners insist upon. Mrs. Cobb instantly planned or first friends, inspired by her example, have also declared themselves ready to take their chances in the air.
